What is Taekwondo Defense?

Taekwondo Defense is a modern, practical form of self-Defense used by martial artists as well as police and military units in countries such as South Korea and Mexico. Unlike other self-Defense systems, it is specifically based on taekwondo techniques. Since 2022, the TKDD community in Europe has been growing steadily and attracting more trainers and clubs.

Why Taekwondo Defense?

Today's taekwondo practice can generally be divided into two directions: the Olympic or athletic style and the traditional style. Although technique and discipline are at the forefront of both approaches, many trainers and athletes feel that practical self-Defense is neglected and lacking in training practice. Taekwondo Defense fills this gap by offering dynamic, realistic techniques that complement traditional taekwondo training and meet the demands of modern society.

By training to become a licensed TKDD instructor, coaches gain a valuable programme that appeals to both new and experienced students and meets the growing need for effective self-Defense skills in today's world.

Who can learn Taekwondo Defense?

Taekwondo Defense is open to martial artists of all disciplines and can be learned and effectively applied even without prior knowledge of Olympic Taekwondo.

Master

- Grand Master Kim Eunseob: Founder and President of the World Taekwondo Defense Federation
- Chief Instructor Jiseok Lee

Seminar content

The Taekwondo Defense Federation (TKDD) in South Korea is already well established, professionally organised and offers both dan examinations and trainer licences. Grand Master Soo-nam Park was commissioned by founder Kim Eunseob to bring TKDD to Europe. The course in Sindelfingen is open to participants from all over the world. Since 2022, the TKDD community has expanded throughout Europe and is now represented at around 30 locations where regular training sessions and coloured belt examinations are held.
